Access to clean water is a fundamental right, yet many municipalities struggle with aging infrastructure, water losses, and financial constraints that hinder their ability to supply communities effectively.

Empower Machite, the appointed service provider for Emalahleni Local Municipality, has been actively conducting a comprehensive assessment of bulk water infrastructure. This initiative aims to reduce losses in the bulk supply system, enhance revenue streams, and improve water supply efficiency.

Over the past few weeks, their expert team has been on-site inspecting critical infrastructure—from reservoirs to pumping stations—to identify inefficiencies, leaks, and potential areas for improvement. Through interactive site visits, they have gathered valuable data to develop tailored solutions for optimizing water management, minimizing losses, and ensuring that more households receive the water they urgently need.

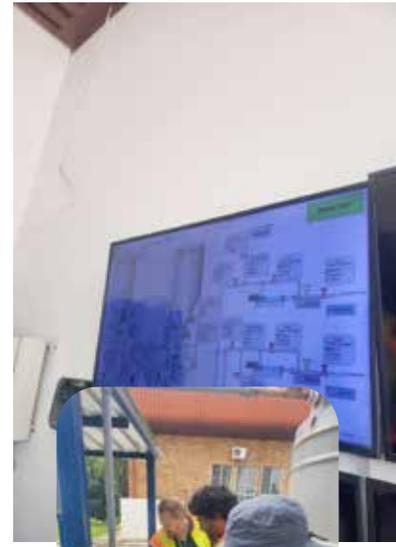

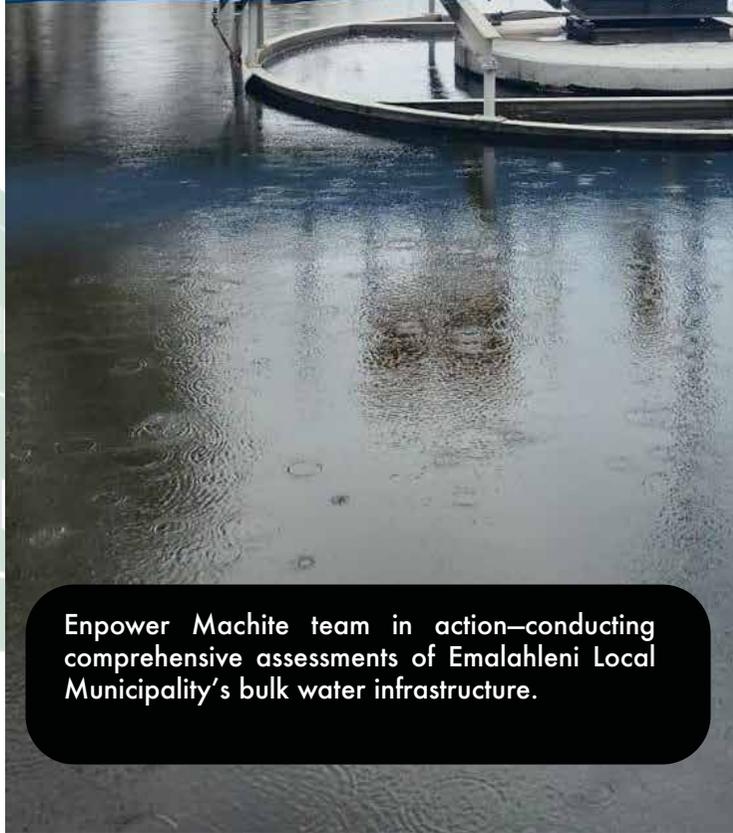

The assessment covered the entire water supply chain, starting from the Witbank Dam abstraction point of raw water, extending to the Water Treatment Works, and concluding at the Distribution Pump Station.

Enhancing Water Infrastructure for a Sustainable Future

This initiative is more than just an investigation—it's about finding practical, sustainable solutions that will strengthen municipal operations and enhance service delivery. The next steps involve analyzing the findings and collaborating with stakeholders to implement strategies that will maximize revenue, reduce wastage, and improve the overall water supply system.

As we move forward, our commitment remains clear: innovative, data-driven solutions that empower municipalities and uplift communities. Because in the pursuit of progress, every investigation is crucial before action is taken. Every drop counts, and every solution matters.

Empower Machite team in action—conducting comprehensive assessments of Emalahleni Local Municipality’s bulk water infrastructure.
